VOLUME 32 No. 4, MAY 2011

30 The Planet Boom.

In just four months, the Kepler space telescope has found 1,200 likely new planets, including dozens that may resemble Earth. Billions more potentially habitable worlds await.

Tim Folger.

40 There's Something in the Water.

Cyanobacteria—the “blue-green algae” widely found in lakes and ponds—contain a toxin that may cause Alzheimer’s and ALS. Could seafood eaters be at risk?

Kathleen McAuliffe.

48 Meet the New Human Family.

Fossil finds and genetic analysis offer a fresh look at our evolutionary heritage, and at the ancestral DNA still lurking inside us.

Jill Neimark.

56 Add a Pinch of Science.

In a new 2,400-page, 40-pound cookbook, a billionaire engineer explains the wonderful things that happen when science and food collide.

Wayt Gibbs and Nathan Myhrvold.

62 Fracking Nation.

Hydraulic fracturing, or fracking, can recover vast supplies of clean-burning natural gas from deposits all over the country. But the rub: Fracking itself is far from pristine.

Linda Marsa.

6 Editor's Note.

We didn't mean to. But we killed a planet while making this month's issue.

- 8 Data.
How soil could combat global warming, invisibility tech, a four-story urban farm, the BP spill revisited, metallic glass, parsing a paramecium, and more.
- 18 Five Questions for John Dabiri.
To build a better submarine, the Caltech engineer is turning to an unlikely source of instruction: the jellyfish.
Will Hunt.
- 20 Vital Signs.
A patient's mild congestive heart failure suddenly turns scarily serious.
Anna Reisman.
- 22 Hot Science.
Space suit couture in Chicago. Plus, the best new books, YV, and DVD's.
- 24 The Brain.
A cunning chemical process enables our neurons to establish trillions of connections with near-perfect precision.
Carl Zimmer.
- 26 Destination Science 2011.
The 27 coolest things to do and places to see, both indoors and out, this summer.
- 80 20 Things You Didn't Know About Crystals.
Rebecca Coffey.
